

"How strange!" submitted the doughty lieutenant, and smiled.

And then he showed Lorna where a bullet had grazed Ginger's ear, and thrilled his fair auditor with the detail of his own wild ride in the saddle when the injury came. Of course, he had to stay to dinner.

"I shall go back by train," he announced, "as I must leave Ginger, according to the directions of the boys of our company, who know the circumstances and chipped in to present Ginger to his rightful owner."

He was in the old phaeton driving Ginger a month later when he halted him amid a flowery woodland.

"It's quiet here and only the birds can hear us," he said. "I love you."

"I am glad," replied Lorna softly and simply.

(Copyright, 1916, W. G. Chapman.

SUFFRAGISTS LOBBY IN WASHINGTON

Suffragists are active in Washington, lobbying for a federal amendment. This picture shows three waiting outside a committee room to tackle congressmen handling the amendment. They are, left to right: Miss Maud Younger and Mrs. Bessie Papandre of San Francisco and Miss Hazel Hunkins of Billings, Mont.